

My thesis History of house n. 136 in the centre of Kutná Hora focuses on the history house, particularly the house n. 136 in Kutná Hora. It is a medieval house which is situated in the southern part of the historical centre of the town and which is the Gothic foundations. House building is evidence of the historical development of the city from its the beginnings to the present. The main aim of my project was looking up for as much as possible information available which touching the history of the house. The primary recourse was a rewrite the city's books by Jan Fiala.

The second part of my project talks about the extensive reconstruction of the house, which runs nowadays. This section includes a description of the actual reconstruction itself and also description of the restored Gothic portals and description of several findings that were found during the reconstruction of the house. Conclusion summarizes and generalizes the ideas developed in the body of the text itself.
